The Cobra Stone

I have often for hours watched cobras in the grass catching the fireflies darting about here and there, a process which requires considerable exertion on the part of the serpent. Now, every entomologist knows that the flying lampyride consist entirely of males. The females, which are not very numerous, are much larger and cannot fly, as they have only rudimentary wings. They sit quietly in the grass, emitting a greenish light, which is much stronger than that of the males, and fades and becomes brilliant at regular intervals. If a glow-worm be watched for a time a steady current of male insects will be observed flying toward is and alighting in close proximity.

Now it so happens that the naja-kallu, this little pebble of chlorophane or fluorspar, emits in the dark a greenish light, which is so much like that of the female lampyris that it is an easy matter to deceive the male firefly with it by setting it up as a decoy. The cobras have gradually come to take advantage of an experience made by them accidentally, I dare say, thousands of years ago. It may frequently happen, for instance, that a cobra finds one of these shining stones in the gravel of the dry river beds, where they are by no means uncommon, being attracted to it by its glow at night, and taking it for a glowworm.

It would then, at any rate, notice that the fireflies could be caught much more easily and quickly in the neighborhood of that shining object than anywhere else, and would habitually return to it. Several cobras might thus come together, and there would be competition, and from this mo-ment to the finding out that success in capturing fireflas depends upon the possession of this phosphorescent pebble, and to the seizing of it in order to prevent another snake from monopolizing it, is, in my opin-ion, no great step, and involves no excep-tional powers of reasoning. The cobra carries it about, and soon learns to treasure it, for it affords it an easy means of getting its living. All it has to do is to deposit the stone in the grass at night, and the obliging insects literally fly down its throat.

There are even reasons for believing that no individual experience is now necessary to cause any cobra to act in this manner, but that even a young cobra, on finding such a stone, will instinctively take it up and use it in the manner I have described. For it must be borne in mind that there is an inherited race memory among the lower animals which is often far more strong than the mais which is often far more strong that the memory gathered during the short time of the individual. What causes a blind kitten to spit and put up its back if a dog is brought near it? It never saw a dog—rever saw anything-yet it knows that there is some danger ahead. Thus the accumulated experience of the cobra's succetors during countless generations now causes it to act in a manner which we refer to instinct.

Such are the remarkable fuc's connected with the naja-kallu, the cobra's shining stone. Who can tell whether the old tradition of snakes carrying precious stones, of which we still find traces in our fairy tales, may not have their source in some such fact as this? - Harper's Magazine

MOBBED A PROPHETESS OF EVIL .- Maria B. Woodworth, the San Francisco prophetess, who predicted the destruction of the Golden Gate city, was mobbed in a tent in St. Louis on Tuesday night. She has been preaching in a tent since her advent there, six weeks ago. She has been predicting all sorts of disasters, and last night a mob of hordlums tore down her tent, broke up the seats, and dispersed the congregation. Many of the women fainted, but no one was seriously injured.

CARNEGIE'S MEN LOCKED OUT .- The extensive steel mills of Carnegie, Phipps & Co., at Beaver Falls, Pa., shut down yesterday. The rod mill bundlers struck Monday night for more pay and were dis-charged. No others could be got to take their places and Superintendent Dillon got angry and shut down the entire plant that morning. Three hundred men are out of
